Program Overview

Distorted Perception of Innocence is a 40-minute autobiographical narrative film followed by a facilitated Reflection & Response dialogue. Together, the experience creates an engaging environment for students to examine how experiences, choices, and self-reflection influence identity development and personal growth.

Rather than presenting trauma as an endpoint, the program invites participants to consider how reflection, accountability, and narrative awareness can shape future decisions and foster resilience.

Learning Objectives

Participants will have the opportunity to:

- Explore the relationship between environment, choices, and identity.
- Examine how personal narratives influence beliefs, behavior, and future aspirations.
- Strengthen reflective thinking through guided dialogue.
- Engage in meaningful conversations around resilience, accountability, and transformation.
- Practice perspective-taking and respectful discussion within a supportive group setting.

Program Themes

- Trauma Adaptation
- Identity Development
- Choices & Consequences
- Reflection & Personal Growth
- Narrative Literacy

- Adaptable for student leadership programs, first-year experiences, student organizations, wellness initiatives, criminal justice, psychology, social work, education, and related disciplines.

About the Film

Drawing from my own experiences growing up in the South Bronx, the film examines the impact of adversity, decision-making, and self-reflection through a framework of choices, actions, reflection, and transformation. The experience is designed to encourage thoughtful dialogue while providing students with an opportunity to consider their own evolving narratives.

Complimentary Introductory Offering

To introduce the program to colleges and universities, the screening and facilitated dialogue are currently offered as a complimentary introductory educational experience, providing institutions an opportunity to evaluate its fit for their students and programming goals.
